Abortion Dr. Kermit Gosnell Sentenced

Gosnell received two life sentences without parole for killing babies born alive. Gosnell "agreed to waive all of his appellate rights in exchange for life in prison ... instead of the death penalty," the office of R. Seth Williams, Philadelphia's District Attorney, said May 14. Nine of Gosnell's employees have faced state and federal charges for their actions at the business. Eight have pleaded guilty to various charges in the case - three of them to third-degree murder. Former employee Stephen Massof, in courtroom testimony in early April, said that he saw about 100 babies born alive. He said workers then "snipped" the backs of their necks to ensure their demise." Massof is in prison after pleading guilty to third-degree murder in the deaths of two newborn babies. Gosnell's wife Pearl was sentenced to 7 to 23 months in prison for her involvement.

The contest is publicized by direct mailings to high schools, youth groups and pastors and is promoted in Life News. For the past three years, winners of the local contest have placed first in state competition and represented New York State at the National Right to Life Oratory Contest. Please watch for this annual contest to be announced in Life News for 2014.

FEDERAL LEGISLATION

The HHS Contraceptive/Sterilization/Abortifacient Mandate is to take full effect on 8/1/2013. In response, the USCCB has called for a repeat of the "Fortnight for Freedom," 6/21-7/4/13. The federal government claims power to decide if an entity is "religious." They say a for-profit business gives up its religious liberty. (Yet no one says a for-profit newspaper loses its press freedom). All await the final wording of the mandate, and the results of court cases.

Seems the IRS made a habit of giving a hard time to pro-life and other 'conservative' groups applying for tax-exempt status. Coalition for Life of Iowa was asked to promise not to picket Planned Parenthood, and asked what its members prayed for. [Washington Examiner 5/17]

The FBI's Joint Domestic Terrorism Task Force asked to meet with Chris Slattery, (President, Expectant Mother Care, Bronx, NY) "for a mutually beneficial relationship." [LifeSiteNews.com 5/29]

In a May 11 speech, Supreme Court Justice Ginsburg played "what if?". 'Suppose Roe v Wade had only struck down the law in Texas. A strong pro-life movement might never have formed, and states would have continued legalizing abortion one by one, with little opposition,' she speculated. Is this a template for future court rulings on "controversial social issues"?

We may get a clue with the "same-sex marriage" ruling, due at the end of June. Perhaps, if things seem to be going their way, pro-abortionists will no longer try for one big court victory.

NEW YORK STATE LEGISLATION

Abortion Expansion Bill Unveiled

Gov. Cuomo, on Tues. 6/4/13, surrounded by pro-abortion advocates, presented his 10 point Women's Equality Act which includes abortion expansion. This bill, if passed, would change NYS abortion law to allow abortion through the ninth month of pregnancy if a physician determines continuing the pregnancy would endanger the mother's health [very broadly defined]. At this time NYS law allows abortion only if the mother's life is endangered by her pregnancy.

Pro-life advocates in all corners of NYS are working non-stop to oppose passage of the 10 point Women's Equality Act because, as presented on 6/4, it includes abortion expansion. Presently, in some areas of NYS, the abortion rate is 60% and NYS has been called "The Abortion Capitol" of the U.S. At this writing, on 6/11/13, the bill is not been brought to a vote in the NYS Senate.

The NYS Legislative Session is scheduled to recess by June 20 or 21.

To check on status of the 10 point Women's Equality Act or the Reproductive Health Act S.438 (no vote taken as of 6/11/13) contact New York State Right to Life Committee 518-434-1293, nysrighttolife.org; New Yorkers for Constitutional Freedoms (NYCF), 518-225-2340, NewYorkersforConstitutionalFreedoms.org. HEALTH & SCIENCE

Stem Cells 101

When the media announces breakthroughs in stem cell research, they often omit one of the most essential pieces of information - whether the stem cells involved are embryonic, adult, or reprogrammed. This vital information is necessary for patients, doctors and the public in general to determine whether the research and treatment is morally and ethically acceptable for them to utilize, recommend or fund.

Brian Clowes, Ph.D. describes stem cells as "immature or undifferentiated cells that have not yet 'decided what type of cell to be'. A stem cell divides into 2 cells: (1) a duplicate of itself and (2) a cell that develops into a more specialized cell type (i.e., an eye, liver, skin or blood cell). Since stem cells replace themselves every time they divide, they are capable of long-term self renewal. Because they are immature, stem cells can be used to treat injuries or diseases. Scientists can make stem cells reach their full healing potential by developing procedures that mature them into the correct type of stable tissue that functions normally, then by making them safe for transplantation, and finally by developing surgical procedures that maximize their ability to treat or cure diseases or injuries."

Clowes defines Human embryonic Stem Cells (HESCs) as follows: "HESCs are harvested from human embryos that are typically between 3 and 6 days old. At this point the blastocyst consists of about 140 cells. Most of these will form the placenta, and a small interior cluster of cells are 'pluripotent' stem cells - able to produce all of the many different types of cells in the human body. This feature of HESCs makes them very attractive to scientists. Harvesting HESCs involves removing the inner cell cluster from the blastocyst and culturing it with various growth factors to produce specific types of cells. This procedure always results in the destruction of the early human being. This means that this procedure is morally equivalent to an abortion." Clowes then warns that the growth of HESCs is very difficult to control and often results in fatal tumors or cancer cells. He states that "Theoretically, this might not be the case if the HESCs were matured into adult cells, but this has proven to be almost impossible to achieve. Even matured HESCs continue to produce tumors. Finally, cells transplanted from an embryo are always attacked by the recipient's immune system, and so the patient must be treated with immunosuppressive drugs that have a variety of side effects. Since these difficult problems have not been overcome, all that HESC research currently offers is promises of future cures. Some have suggested that scientists clone a human embryo from a patient's own cells, thereby overcoming the rejection problem, but this procedure is still illicit since it would involve the destruction of an embryo. Although intensive [HESC] research has been done since 1998, not a single workable cure has been found. Dr. Clowes describes adult stem cells as "any stem cell in a human being older than a 7-day embryo. These cells are found throughout the body and in the umbilical cord. Their purpose is to replace damaged or worn-out cells throughout a person's life. They are more limited in their capabilities - for example, a blood stem cell ... cannot become ... a bone cell or an eye cell. These cells are called 'multipotent'... Adult stem cells show a lot more than promise. They have cured numerous people with serious diseases, and have been doing so for decades. Adult stem cells can currently cure more than 70 medical conditions, and there are more than 4,400 ongoing or recently completed government-funded clinical trials using adult stem cells in the USA. The greatest moral advantage that adult stem cells have over HESCs is that no life is taken in acquiring them. There are also several other great advantages to using adult stem cells in therapeutic applications, which is what the entire field is supposed to be interested in: They are grown from the patient's own body, so there is no problem with immune reactions; they are much easier to harvest, since they exist all over the body, even in fat cells; and finally, they are much easier to control, and do not form cancerous tumors."

Induced pluripotent stem cells (iPSCs), according to Clowes, are "adult body ('somatic') cells that are reprogrammed into a state that is very similar to a HESC. They are not identical to HESCs, but have the same function, which means that they can produce any type of adult cell. One of the great advantages of iPSCs is that they are taken from the patient's own body, thereby making rejection impossible... they do not require the destruction of a human embryo. However, iPSCs may potentially grow tumors like HESCs, have low replication rates and suffer from premature aging. Importantly, some pro-life ethicists and leaders have raised serious questions about the nature of iPSCs, asking whether they are actually reprogrammed into becoming tiny embryos. We would do well to continue to be vigilant as this area of research continues to grow."

Clowes concludes that "pro-abortion scientists and politicians promised a glittering crop of miracle cures from ESCR, if only those pesky, backwards pro-lifers would just step aside and stop hindering scientific progress with their 'Medieval' morality. The government and private corporations have poured hundreds of millions of dollars into ESCR, which has yielded zero cures, while adult stem cell research... has produced successful treatments for a host of diseases. In other words, the morally acceptable... stem cell research option has actually been successful, yet scientists continue the unethical destruction of human embryos with their focus on ESCR." (Brian Clowes, LifeNews.com 5/20/13)
